Fenna Doughty

Fenna grew up in a typical dwarven mining community, and led a normal, average life until the age of ten. One day, while wandering the mountain slopes, she came across an old human woman picking up rocks. Fenna taunted her, casting aspersions on her height, age and the quality of her rocks. Ordinarily, this would have been mere childish play, ending with nothing worse than a telling-off... but when you tell a witch that her carbonaceous chondrites are practically sandstone, you can get more than you bargained for.

The witch cursed her with a terrible illness: allergy to axes. To this day, Fenna still cannot touch an axe without sneezing, or look at one without feeling her eyes start to water. For many people, this would be a quirk, but for a dwarf it is a crippling affliction. After their attempts to have the curse lifted failed, her family disowned her, and she was left to fend for herself on the streets of the nearest city. She supported herself by robbing and stealing, learning all she could from the rough underworld, and being tough enough to win street fights.

Fenna is very thin and wiry for a dwarf, largely due to malnutrition. She's still too stocky to be mistaken for a halfling, if the goatee wasn't enough of a clue. She's 4'2", is covered in tools and weaponry, and has blue eyes. Her hair is too dirty for anyone to tell what colour it is.
